LETTER OF SUBMITTAL.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 15, 1894.

SIR: I submit herewith a Comprehensive Index of the Publications of the United States, 1889 to 1893, the printing of which is authorized by concurrent resolution of March 3, 1893.

I have long felt that what is most imperatively needed, in connection with the publications of the Government, is a carefully prepared and exhaustive index. Such an index would vastly increase their use, and therefore their value to the public. It would serve as a key to unlock the treasures that are now hidden from the knowledge of all but the very few whose business it is to acquaint themselves with the documents that issue from the Government Printing Office. Nothing else would so greatly subserve the convenience of all public men, the libraries of the country, and all others who have occasion often to consult public documents.

With this conviction, I have repeatedly urged that provision be made by Congress for the preparation of such an index, not only of documents yet to be printed, but also of those already published. As Congress, however, failed from session to session to make such provision, I took upon myself, about three years ago, the task, additional to the current and prescribed work of my office, of preparing an index of the documents issued during the period covered by the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses.

My object was to publish an index of such a character, as to contents, form, etc., as from my long experience in my present office I judged would, in the largest measure, meet the requirements of the situation. This work would then be submitted for criticism to officers of the Government, librarians, and others, with a view to the embodiment of such suggestions as seemed judicious in a second edition. In this way, it was thought, a final form satisfactory to all could be determined upon, which might wisely be applied to all the publications of the Government.

The labor involved in the preparation of this volume proved much greater than I had anticipated, and its completion has, therefore, been much delayed; nor would it now be ready for publication except for the fact that I have given to it a great deal of extra official time, and for the further fact that several of the clerks of my office have rendered most willing and efficient aid in its preparation. Especially am I indebted to Mr. C. H. Cassavant for most valuable assistance in preparing copy for the press and in proof-reading.

Should this work, which covers a period of only four years, prove acceptable to those for whom it has been prepared, and commend itself, in actual use, as a satisfactory index, then provision should be made, without delay, for indexing in a similar manner all the publications of the Government. In this way alone can information as to what is embraced in the great mass of public documents issued be afforded the public at large, and these documents be made to subserve, in fullest measure, both individual and public interests.

Very respectfully,

JOHN G. AMES,
Superintendent of Documents.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 15, 1894.

SIR: It gives me pleasure to express my hearty commendation of your Index of Public Documents. I am sure that it will be welcomed as a most acceptable contribution to this class of literature by members of Congress, by officers of the Government, and by the public at large.

A vast amount of valuable information is to be gathered from the public documents, but the number is so great and the matter so poorly assorted that it is well-nigh unavailable for practical use. Your index and similar indexes will open up and make accessible a great mass of information which is now almost a sealed book, and will increase many times its actual service.

I sincerely hope that the publication of this index may lead to some provision by Congress for the preparation of a comprehensive index of all public documents.

Very truly, yours,

HOKE SMITH,
Secretary.

Mr. JOHN G. AMES,
Superintendent of Documents.

PREFACE.

To anyone familiar with the publications of the Government, it must be evident that a satisfactory index of the same must be sui generis, differing, in certain important respects, from that of any other series of publications. This is rendered necessary, in the first place, by the peculiar and complicated classification of public documents; and, in the second place, by the multiplicity of editions of many of these documents, issued in distinct series and under different titles. Such an index must not only contain a reference to every document published, but it must clearly indicate where the document is to be found in the several series under which Government publications are classified, and if issued in more than one edition or series, then a reference to each edition or series must be given.

Many documents, for instance, are published as Executive or miscellaneous documents of the Senate or House of Representatives, again, in a different style of binding and with a different title, as reports or publications of an Executive Department, and again, with still another title, as reports of a particular bureau or office of the department. To subserve the largest convenience, therefore, an index must take cognizance of each of these editions.

The question of making the work an authors', as well as a subject, index has received careful consideration. Of course the one essential element in such an index is the subject, to which the author must be held entirely subordinate. To incorporate an authors' index with the subject index would materially increase the bulk of the work, with no corresponding advantage. At the same time it is regarded as important that the author of every document, or the source from which it emanates, should be indicated.

As all public documents are printed at the Government Printing Office at Washington, no reference is made to their place of publication; and as they are all publications of the United States, none of them are indexed under the title "United States." In an index of miscellaneous books, these references might be necessary or important, but not in an index devoted exclusively to public documents.

The above considerations have determined the special form or arrangement given to the index. The left-hand column shows the origin of documents indexed: the Executive Department or office from which they come, if Executive documents; the committees of the Senate or House presenting them, if reports, and the individual member of the committee making the report; and the authors of most of the miscellaneous documents and papers referred to. For convenience of reference, an alphabetical index of these authors and persons is appended at the close of the volume.

The right-hand column shows their classification as Congressional documents, i. e., as Executive documents, Miscellaneous documents, and Reports of Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, indicating the congress and session to which they appertain, the volume of the series in which each is embraced or which it forms, the serial number of the document, and the number of pages it contains.

The middle or principal column is the index itself, showing as concisely as practicable the subject of each and every document accessible published during the period covered by the index, together with its date, and in the case of documents issued in two or more editions, the series, other than the Congressional, in which they are found; and in the case of Senate and House Reports, the serial numbers of the bills upon which such reports are based. This last will enable anyone who wishes readily to trace the discussions in Congress of the questions involved in these reports by reference to the Congressional Record, and is regarded as an important feature of the index. Whenever these bills were enacted into laws, and in many cases when the recommendations of Executive officers were embodied in acts of Congress, a reference to these acts, as found in the Statutes at Large, is also given in this column.

In case a document is issued in a form separate and distinct from the volume of Congressional documents in which it is incorporated, or from the general work of which it forms a part, this fact is shown by the abbreviation "Sep." in this column.

The dates given are, with a few exceptions, those at which the documents were submitted for printing, not those of their publication, the former being regarded as much more important, while in a great majority of cases the latter could only approximately be given.

With few exceptions, two lines are devoted to each entry, and in these the complete story of each document is given as fully as the purpose of the index requires.

This purpose has been to cite not merely every numbered document published by the Government as embraced in the Congressional classification, many of which constitute entire volumes, but also every important paper embraced in these volumes. Each of these volumes is indexed under its proper title, while each of the important reports contained in the volume is also indexed under its special subject. So far as they were available, all the publications of the Executive Departments of the Government not included in the numbered series of Congressional documents issued during the period covered by the index are also noted in the work. While the officers of the Government, to whom requests were preferred, have been uniformly ready to supply special publications issued under their supervision, or information regarding them, it is probable that some at least of these publications have been overlooked, attention to which it is hoped may hereafter be called, so that they may be included in a future edition of the index. As it is, however, these special publications number many hundred and form a very valuable portion of the work.

In a word, the aim has been to make the volume what its title implies—A Comprehensive Index of the Publications of the Government—so that anyone in search of information on any subject can readily ascertain whether this information is found in any of these publications, and, if so, where; to supersede all partial indexes, or indexes of special series of documents, by combining all such indexes in a single volume, and adding to these a reference also to every other public document, so that a single index shall fully and satisfactorily accomplish what the many hitherto issued have only partially done.

It is not supposed that the work will meet the approval and commendation of all, nor is it by any means thought to be beyond improvement. It is rather a tentative effort, and is put forth for the purpose and in the hope of eliciting such criticisms and suggestions from those most competent to make them as will help to render a future edition satisfactory to all. It is believed, however, that without material modifications, the form and general character of the index may be made acceptable to all who have occasion to use it, and that these may be wisely adopted in indexing all future publications of the Government. Such an index is now the one essential requirement in connection with public documents. Provision by Congress at an early date for its preparation and publication may be anticipated with a good degree of confidence.
